Dispute Resolution

Buy with complete confidence and transparency

The European Union has created a website to support consumers in submitting their complaints about any dispute in which they are involved. In this context, The Seller provides all the information so that you can exercise your right to complain to an official entity, third party and impartial to the process. Therefore, if you are dissatisfied with the purchase of a good or service on our website, or with the solution presented by us to resolve the situation, you can access this official website <https://ec.europa.eu/consumers/odr> and expose your objection.

What is Alternative Dispute Resolution?

The alternative resolution of disputes is the possibility that all consumers have at their disposal to appeal to official entities that help them in the resolution, or orientation of any conflict, before opening litigious processes in the Courts. As a general rule, the procedure is as follows: the customer asks an impartial third party to act as an intermediary between him and the trader who is the target of his complaint. The intermediary can suggest a solution to your complaint, impose a solution on both parties, or bring the parties together to find a solution.

Perhaps you know the concept of alternative dispute resolution by another name: 'mediation', 'conciliation', 'arbitration' or 'competent commission in the context of consumer disputes'.

Alternative dispute resolution is, as a rule, less expensive, less formal and faster than the judicial route.
